IN THE LAST TEN YEARS

I am still raising grapes on two acres just West of Lincoln. I have 850 vines of five different varieties of grapes. My most substantial customer is the James Arthur Winery. The relationship between the economic value of the end product and the raw material from which that product is made is minimal. Our share of a bottle of wine is somewhere around $1.50 so we made about fifty cents an hour last year operating the vineyard. I suppose that's why most people call it "hobby" farming.

Joyce is a clinical nurse specialist in cardiac and intensive care cases at Bryan Memorial Medical Center. Both children live and work in Lincoln so we have abundant opportunities to see and enjoy our grandchildren often.
